Since the beginning of time guys have been fascinated by women's breasts. Here's why.

Female breasts are still tops and will stay that way – at least for the next two thousand years. That's how long the male obsession with the female breast is known to have lasted. And, surprise, it is not an exclusively American fixation, as certain badly informed "authorities" delight in claiming. Snide remarks about the American male's breast worship attribute it to a desperate yearning for a return to the security and comfort of the motherly bosom.

An impartial team of researchers in the UK have dismissed that ideal. A professor at London University's Department of Anthropology goes on to explain that "the nation boasting the strongest and most virile males has always been the nation that venerated the female breast." This professor's team condemned as "puerile nonsense" the notion that breast worship by males is a sign of effeminacy. On the contrary, they determined it is easily seen in history as a sure sign of civilized sophistication and old-school masculinity. It has helped to ensure the continued procreation of the strongest of human strains. It is a powerful instinct deliberately implanted in the male by nature, for which we should offer our most grateful thanks.

Women have been wearing some form of bra to improve their breast appeal in the eyes of men since they first turned in their one-piece ctavewoman outfits for something more chic and sexy. Some historians say the uplift bra was first invented around 2800 B.C. by the ladies of Crete and Minoa. It was recorded that the ancient Hebrews had the breast strap, and the Romans a band of regal purple wool as called the strophium.

About 30 B.C. the Roman poet Ovid described what we now call "falsies" as "ingenious coverings which round out the breast and lend it what it lacks." From as far back as the time of Charlemagne in the ninth century, there are records of girdles which also supported the breasts. In countries where women rode horses, bras and girdles were regarded as practical garments to support the waist and push up the bosom.

In medieval days the focal rulers got a big kick in being received in the outlying districts by local beauties bare from the waist up. Louis XV remarked that in assessing a lady's sexual capabilities the first thing one should observe and examine carefully was her bosom – and to hell with the rest.

Catherine de Medici, wife of King Henry II, had a small bosom and a tiny waist. She therefore tried to enforce a royal decree that large bosoms were unfashionable and waists were definitely "in." Anything larger than a 13-inch waistline was ridiculed in court, and all breasts were camouflaged to make them look flat.

But voluptuous Anne of Austria, looking more than generously endowed up there, turned the fashion from small to large boobs. And barbers of the period sold preparations to enlarge the breasts to husbands and suitors intent on administering the necessary therapy to bring about such a desirable change in their women.

Marie Antoinette, who took great pride in her magnificent breasts, bared them at every opportunity. She willingly modeled for the famous pale pink Sevres "breast bowls" that decorated her favorite retreat. In the grounds she and her court played at being milkmaids and shepherds – a bosom-cult game which caught on like wildfire.

In the era of the French Republic and Directoire (1795-1799), the height of fashion for wives and mistresses was a sheer see-through dress of muslin worn over pink silk tights. Nothing else was worn over the breasts or under them. Nipples were painted a vivid crimson, and the flesh-colored silk was dampened to make it even more transparent.

All of which is additional proof that worship of this part of the female body is by no means confined to American men or to modern times alone. Since the breast is one of the most important sex characteristics of women, its beauty has been held in high esteem among almost all civilized and primitive peoples—although the ideas of such beauty have varied considerably. There have been periods and cultures in which the female bosom frankly played a much more prominent role than it does in America today.

Statuettes and paintings which have come down to us from ancient Minoan days (2800-1100 B.C.) depict women in very tight bodices and billowing skirts, with completely nude exposure of their breasts and nipples. In many ancient countries, round or dome-shaped rocks or hills were likened to the breasts of the women and were favorite sites for altars and religious buildings. Artificial mounds and pyramids, deliberately shaped to represent female breasts with erect nipples, were regarded as sacred edifices. Their remains, in various shapes and sizes, are to be found in all parts of the world.

In Sparta, cakes shaped like breasts were carried triumphantly in wedding processions by young men who followed the bride and sang her praises. On the Indonesian island of Celebes, large replicas of women's breasts and sexual organs were found on posts erected in honor of fallen warriors.

During Tudor times in England, the token of blooming maidenhood was the open, revealing bosom. It was regarded as highly improper and immodest for a young woman to cover her breasts until after she was married. This explains why Queen Elizabeth I took such pains to wear extremely low-cut dresses until she was an old woman.

Throughout the 17th century in Europe, the great center of erotic attraction was undeniably the breasts, either completely exposed or almost so. All through the Restoration drama in England the breasts were freely praised and admired. The dominant fashion, evident during the early 17th century in the paintings of Peter Paul Rubens, was for very large bosoms and small nipples greatly exposed.

Once at a party given in his honor, the strait-laced Louis XIII of France expressed himself as being repulsed by the prolific exposure of naked female breasts. In fact, he covered his eyes with his hat and at the end of the party; he even went to the shockingly ants were applied to the breasts of growing girls. The liquid issuing from them stung the skin, causing a swelling which was increased by dabbing it with nettles.

- In some tribes young women constricted their breasts with a tight band until they projected conically.

- Other tribes lengthened the breasts to such an extent that nursing mothers were actually able to feed a child carried on their backs by flinging discourteous extreme or pouring a jugful of wine down the exposed bosom of one of the court ladies.

Although the firm, rounded breast is most often been regarded as the most beautiful and desirable, at various times and places people have held different views concerning their ideal of busty beauty. Through the centuries women have adopted in many unusual ways to reshape and mold the bosom:

- When girls of certain South African tribes reached seven or eight years of age, their mothers began to rub their breasts with an ointment made from lion fat and native roots. The area around the nipples was kneaded vigorously. Later the nipple was elongated to two inches or more and tied around with strips of fiber.

- In parts of New Guinea, headless their breasts over their shoulders!

- In striking contrast, Spanish girls in the 16th and 17th centuries had their breasts covered with leaden plates. The result was a positive cavity instead of a protuberance. Extreme thinness was considered beautiful at that time. Breasts as flat and even as a sheet of paper were considered the last word in sexual attraction.

The practice spread to other European countries, and in many cases women could not suckle their children and there was great infant mortality.

For centuries researchers have speculated with great wonder on the psychological basis for this universally held feeling of reverence for the female breast. Havelock Ellis, dean of sexologists, pointed out that the genitals of men and women have never played the primary part in sexual allurements. From the first, he said, the secondary characteristics (breasts, hips, legs, thighs) area far more widespread method of sexual attraction.

According to Erasmus Darwin, the male feeling toward the female breast is not of purely sexual origin. He points out that when the infant is born, its mother's breast is the first object to provide it with a number of agreeable sensations — a sense of warmth on being cuddled, and a gratification of its senses of smell, taste and touch as well as appetite.

All of these various kinds of pleasure become associated with the form of the mother's breast, which the infant embraces with his hands, presses with his lips, and watches with his eyes. As a result, in his mature years any object whose form is similar to the form of the female bosom gives him a pleasurable sensation.

One startling explanation of "bosom hypnosis," put forward by a biologist, suggests that the female nipple and the area of colored skin which surrounds it, called the areola, correspond to the sexual skin which one can see on the buttocks of certain monkeys. This is the stimulus which turns the ape's thoughts in a sexual direction.

The breasts are attractive but the actual sexual stimuli, in humans, are the woman's nipple and areola. Many women have a secret desire to expose their breasts, particularly the nipples, but to do this in a society in which they are usually concealed is impossible except in strict privacy or on the stage.

The fact that breasts act as a sexual stimulus, and particularly so if they are exposed, explains why the law makes it an offense in most countries to expose them on the street. It is the nipples that seem to be regarded as "wicked." However low-cut and revealing the dress is in the bust area, the nipples must be at least partially concealed. Otherwise they might, presumably, cause perfectly healthy and well-adjusted young men to explode in a rampage of lust.

This attitude persists, even though it is so blatantly hypocritical. Girls make full use of their other points of sexual attraction. For example, a beautiful face is just as attractive and yet girls are allowed to make it more so by using cosmetics. Lovely legs, thighs and buttocks are attractive and deliberately made more beautiful by sexy pantyhose, short skirts and tight pants.

Millions of girls no doubt look at themselves in the mirror and say, "My face is pretty, but so is my body. Why shouldn't I use these perfect breasts and nipples to land a guy, just as much as my pretty face?"

Yet, exposure in women is really a matter of tactics. If all women expose themselves, breasts and nipples may lose their attraction. Men might pass them by with no more interest than a fashionable hairdo.

At this stage of the game however such calamity seems to be fantastically impossible. "Some American men," concluded noted sexologist Alfred Kinsey in Sexual Behavior of the Human Female, "are more aroused erotically by observing female breasts, or touching them, than they are by the sight of, or contact with, female genitalia."

Kinsey and his colleagues; in interviews with 5,940 women, found that approximately half of them derived "some distinct satisfaction" from male manual or oral contact with their breasts. Among 11 percent, breast stimulation was so important that they consistently used it as an aid to masturbation. A few responded so intensely that they were capable of achieving orgasm from breast stimulation alone, without any genital contact.

The Kinsey researchers noted that 98 percent of all American couples engage in manual stimulation of the female breasts during sexual foreplay, and 93 percent in oral stimulation.

Many women firmly believe that the sucking and kissing of their nipples will cause their breasts to increase in size. Continual massaging and stimulation of the breasts by male hands will certainly do so, but not to any great extent.

Undoubtedly the female bosom continues to rule the roost sexually in the bedroom, the entertainment field, on the beach and at the local dance club. Where once the 37-inch bosom of Venus de Milo was regarded as the absolute maximum in desirability, girls have discovered that 39- and even 40-inch expansions absolutely hypnotize males — and that they receive much more loving attention than those an inch or two smaller.

AFTER THE SHOW

Ears still buzzing from the concert, Sylvester Ward worked his way down the litter-strewn aisle, stabbing trash with his spike and dumping it in a large canvas bag strapped to his back.

The concert goers had left quite a mess in their wake – cigarette butts, empty beer cans, paper cups, food wrappers. The cigarette butts were the worst, requiring a special set of tongs which were tedious to manipulate.

At this rate, Sylvester thought, I'll be here all damned night . . .

He was one of a dozen flunkies tasked with cleaning up the massive arena after tonight's heavy metal extravaganza. The bands had played to a packed house. Having caught the tail end of the last act, Sylvester had liked the performance, but his enjoyment had been tempered by the wearisome labor awaiting him.

Now, toiling in an uppermost section of the arena (the proverbial "nose bleed" seats), he berated himself for neglecting to wear ear plugs. Had the earsplitting music damaged his ear drums? He certainly hoped not. Last thing he needed was a costly medical bill. Picking up odd jobs here and there, Sylvester was hardly flush with cash.

He had no health insurance, no retirement, no benefits whatsoever. And no woman . . .

The concert had been a constant reminder of his single status. Hot chicks everywhere you looked. And those heavy metal types with their tight jeans, skin-hugging spandex pants, and short denim skirts were something else.

Hot!

His mother called them harlots, citing their revealing outfits, heavily made up faces, and wildly teased hair as evidence of this. Well, Sylvester thought, to hell with his mother. She was nothing but a self-righteous, bitter old bag.

Nothing he did was ever good enough for her. The jobs he worked, the clothes he wore, even the way he combed his hair – she found fault with everything. Had he dated some sexy heavy metal chick – well, she would have blown a gasket.

Sylvester was just about to occupy a nose bleed seat and take a break when he spotted the body sprawled on the floor. "Shit." He dropped his spike, unburdened himself of the cumbersome canvas bag, and rushed over.

"A heavy metal hottie!" he said to himself.

Was she dead? Hurt? Or had she just partied too hard? The mystery was solved when Sylvester knelt beside her supine form and saw the empty half pint bottle in her outstretched hand.

"Wake up." He shook her.

"Hey, wake up . . ."

"Did you come to the concert alone?" Sylvester asked her.

"Hell no. I came with my boyfriend. Make that ex-boyfriend now." She sighed. "I still can't believe that jerk left me on the fucking floor. So what if I had a little the cleanup crew to come along and interrupt me while I'm sucking your dick . . ."

"You and me both," Sylvester said.

As soon as they entered the ladies room she crouched before him and reached for his zipper.

prick into her pink gash and commenced to thrusting.

"That's it, baby," she urged him. "Get it in there. Fuck that pussy good . . ."

Sylvester did just that, banging her from behind until they both came.

Sylvester finished cleaning his section of the arena much faster than he had anticipated. The heavy metal harlot proved to be multi-talented as she helped him with the job.

Still, it was almost three in the morning when they finally got out of there and he drove her home.

Sylvester never saw her again.

But he thinks about her often.

And gets a raging hard-on every time he listens to heavy metal!

QUICK LUBE

too much to drink. That's what rock concerts are for . . ."

After helping her regain consciousness, Sylvester had walked with her to the ladies room and had waited outside while she had splashed cold water on her face.

Now they stood talking in the empty corridor which encircled the arena. Talking, that is, until she shocked Sylvester by crushing her lips to his. Her tongue tasted of bourbon and cigarettes and he loved it.

Sylvester searched her heavily made up face. "What was that for?"

"Helping me," she told him. "And there's more where that came from. I mean, if you're interested . . ."

"Oh, I'm interested."

"Then let's go to the ladies room. I'd hate for somebody from

Sylvester leaned against the sink and watched her glossy lips devour his member. She gave fantastic head, sloppy and slutty and it wasn't long before she dipped lower to service his balls.

Grasping his shaft with her hand, she pumped him while licking and sucking his nuts. Oh yeah, Sylvester reasoned, her boyfriend was definitely a moron, quite possibly the dumbest son-of-a-bitch in the world.

Still stroking his cock, she looked at him and said, "You ready to stick it somewhere tight and hot?"

She stood and leaned over the sink, regarding Sylvester over her shoulder as he moved behind her and lifted the hem of her vinyl miniskirt. Moving her black lace thong aside, he guided his

"Pop it!" barked the grizzled oil change technician.

I reached down, yanked the release lever, and watched as the tech disappeared behind my raised hood. I had chosen this particular quick lube joint because they let you remain inside your car. No sitting in a cramped waiting room breathing a shitload of germs.

This was more like it. The royal treatment, more or less.

"You really know how to show a girl a good time," Penny said from the passenger seat, her words dripping with sarcasm.

"Hey," I told her, "this baby was way overdue for a proper lube job. You wouldn't want us to break down on our way to the movie, would you?"

"Of course not," she replied. "But you could've taken care of this before you picked me up.”

She was right. After all, this was our first date. I was hardly making a good impression by bringing her to a noisy garage which reeked of motor oil. Of all the boneheaded moves! I silently berated myself for being such an idiot.

“Sorry, Penny. I didn’t mean any disrespect.”

She stiffened, sitting there in silence as one tech inspected my engine and the other descended into the pit beneath my car. The other bay was empty. I looked in my rearview mirror. Nobody waited behind us. Penny and I had the joint to ourselves.

“The movie should be great,” I broke the silence. “It’s been getting really good reviews.”

Penny sighed. “Whatever . . .”

She was pissed. Big time. I thought about calling the whole thing off. Maybe that would be best, I reasoned. Win some, lose some . . .

“Do you want me to take you home?” I asked her.

Penny looked at me. “Is that what you want?”

“Of course not. But you seem really unhappy.”

“You could’ve fooled me.”

“I’m just bored.”

“Look, I’ll admit this isn’t the most exciting place in the —”

“Then let’s liven it up,” she cut me off.

I searched her face. “Liven it up?”

“Did I stutter?”

“Well, no, but —”

That’s when Penny put her hand on my crotch, and things took an abrupt turn for the better!

My raised hood effectively concealed us from the grizzled tech. As for the other grease monkey — well, he was still toiling down there in the pit.

All this to say that Penny and I had plenty of privacy; or as much as one could reasonably expect at a quick lube joint.

Penny rubbed me through my chinos until I was good and hard. Then she unzipped me and pulled it out.

“Nice,” she said, eyeing my sloppy and slutty and I wouldn’t have wanted it any other way.

I felt it polite to announce my forthcoming release. Some girls like to swallow. Others, not so much. Penny responded to my warning by fondling my balls with the same hand she had used to stroke me; this while blowing me cock.

She leaned over the center console and spat on me. I settled into my seat as she went to work with her hand. Penny gave one hell of a tugjob. She stroked me slowly, talking dirty as she did so. I responded to her expert ministrations, getting harder and harder.

In a few moments Penny upped the pace. No longer content to prime me at a sensible clip, she pumped my swollen shaft with a frenzied jerking motion.

“Oh, shit,” I gasped.

Then, having taken me to the brink, she withdrew her hand and employed her mouth. Penny’s cock gobbling skills were most impressive. She serviced me with speedy urgency, and groaning as she moved her head up and down. It was a sloppy blowjob, with a renewed sense of purpose.

Mine was a rip-roaring orgasm, easily one of the most intense I had ever experienced. I exploded like a pipe bomb inside her mouth, giving her a heaping helping of ball sauce.

No sooner had I zipped up than the tech lowered my hood. Penny was wiping her lips with the back of her hand as he came around to the open driver’s side window. “How did you want to pay, my friend? Cash or card?”

“Card,” I told him.

By this time the other tech had climbed out of the pit; he wiped his filthy hands with an even filthier rag.

I couldn’t tell you a damned thing about the movie. Penny and I skipped it, went back to her place, split a six-pack, and fucked each other’s brains out!
